An orchestra made up of 100 physicians from more than 40 countries will make their debut on the mainland this weekend, with all the ticket revenue and contributions going to Chinese medical research and patients in need.

At the invitation of the China International Medical Foundation and China International Cultural Exchange Center, the World Doctors Orchestra will perform Sunday evening in Beijing and Monday evening in Shanghai, according to a press conference held Thursday in Beijing.

Cai Siyi, orthopedist from Peking Union Medical College Hospital will join the performance with a violin. The orchestra, founded in 2007, performs twice a year a benefit concert for medical aid projects. On November 14, 2010, it performed in Taipei.
